“The Year of
CHARLOTTE MANNYA MAXEKE
16 Days of Activism- moving from awareness to accountability”

16 Days of Activism against Gender-Based Violence (GBV) is an annual campaign worldwide from 25 November (International Day of No Violence against Women) to 10 December (International Human Rights Day). During this time, the aim is to raise awareness of the negative impact that violence against women and children has on society. South Africa joined the campaign in 1998 as one of the strategic interventions to make South Africa a violence-free society

The success of this campaign rests on our daily individual and collective actions to safeguard our society against the cycle of abuse against women and children.

A world without violence is possible, and this moment demands unparalleled courage and joint action to make this vision a reality.

1 in 3 women will experience abuse at the hands of their intimate partners. In South Africa, the abuse culminates in a woman being killed every 4 hours. Most women killed in South Africa are killed by their partners or ex-partners, and many of them suffer months or years of domestic abuse before their deaths. The fact that a woman is most likely to be abused or killed by her long-term partner gives new meaning to the current wedding vows that end with “until death do us part”.
